It shows Sprint 1 and the backlog section, where work items can be added

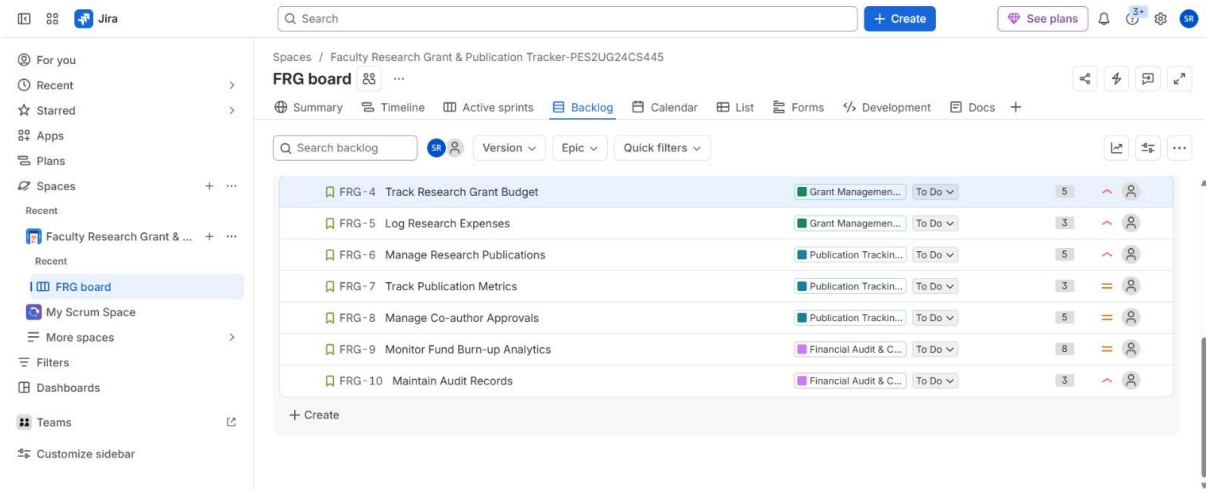

This screenshot shows the Jira backlog with 7 work items. Here all the priority icon in jira are set to medium

In this priority icons are changed according to requirements table as high for FRG-4,5,6 AND 10.

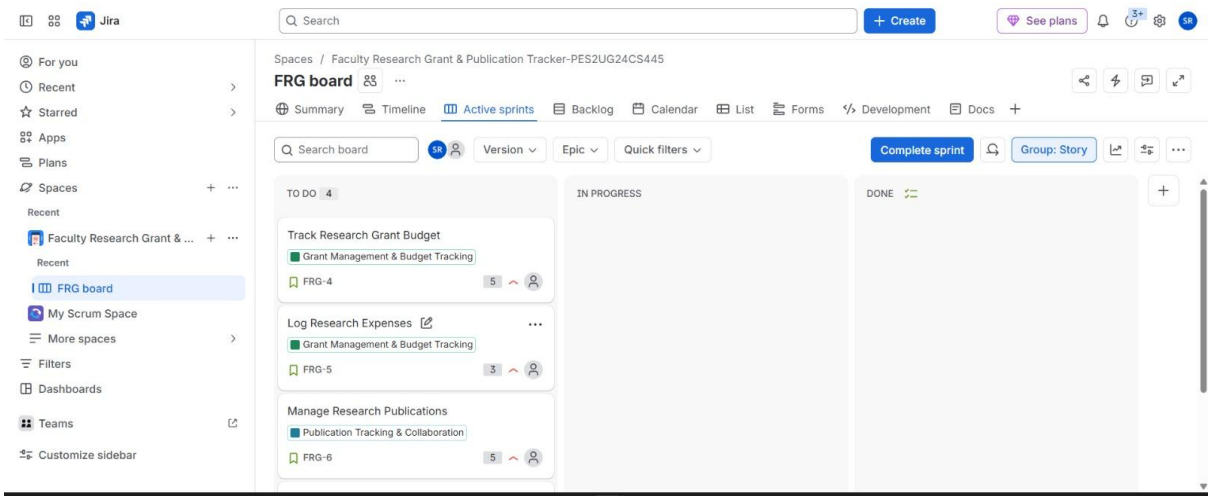

IN this story points are set in FIBONOCCI as 5,3,5,3,5,8,3

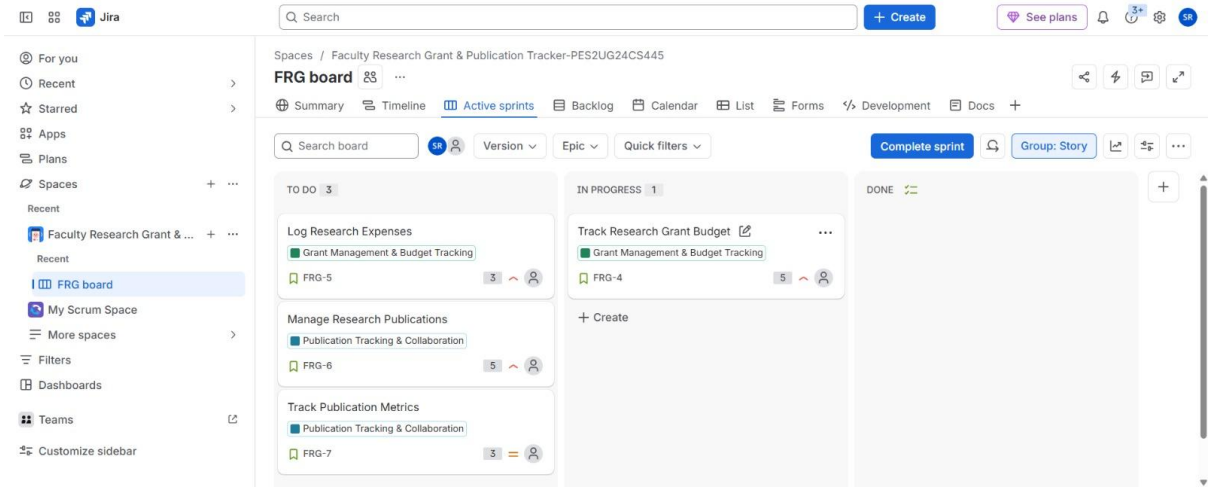

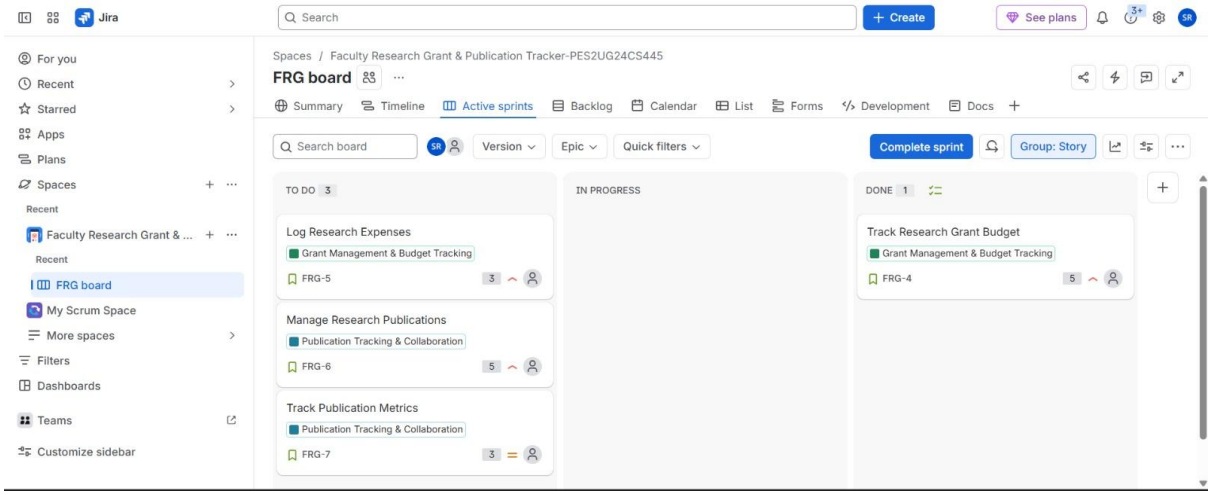

Here the FRG sprint-1 is started after copying it from backlog to FRG-Sprint1

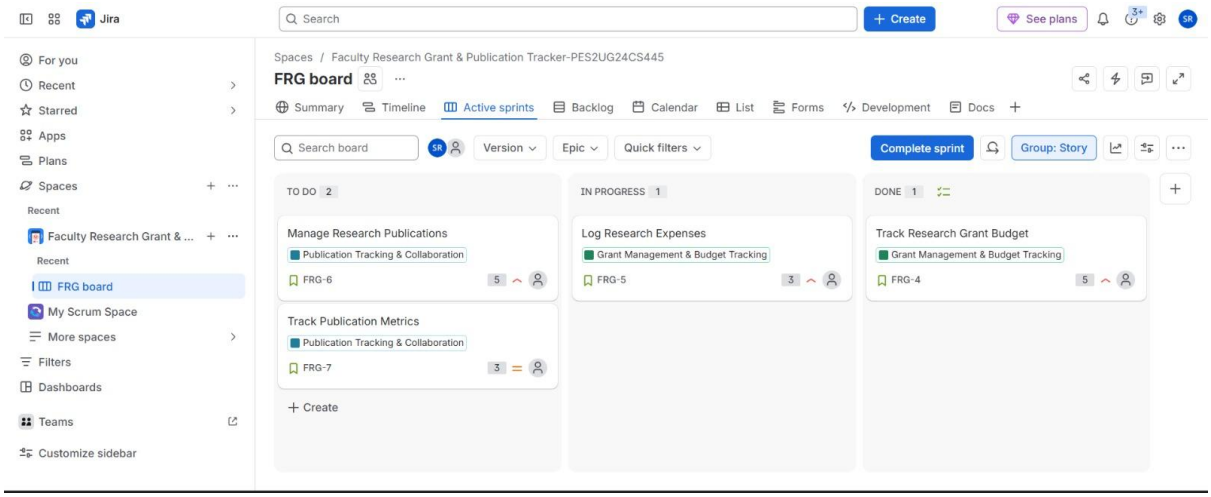

All of them are in TO-DO's now

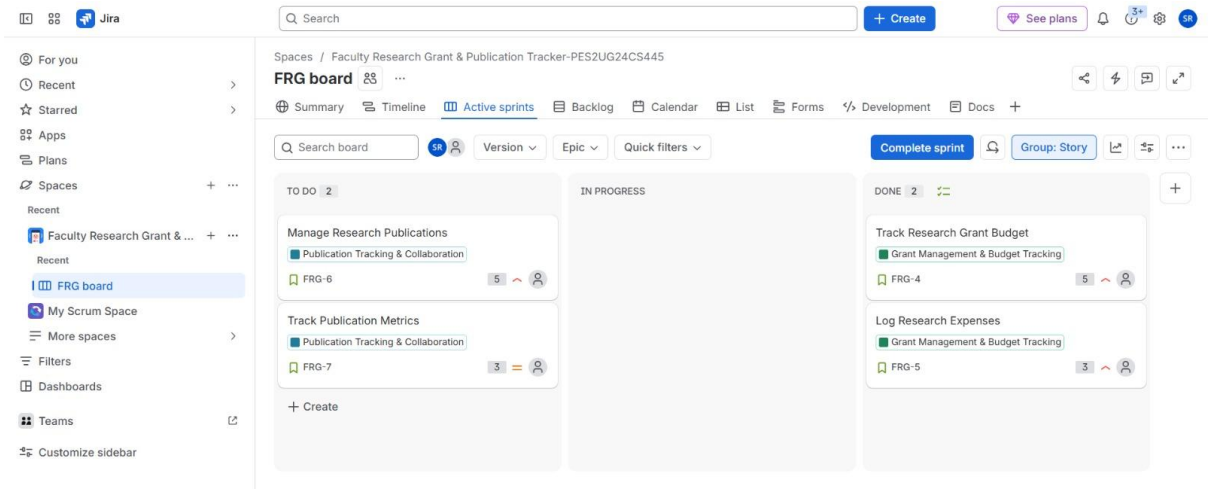

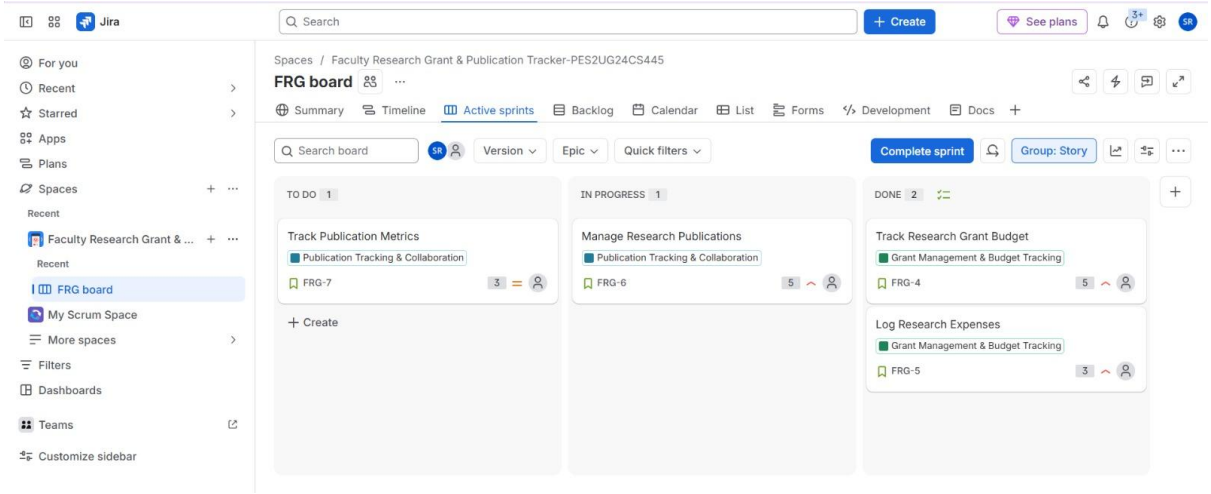

NOW each work item are shifted from TO-DO->IN PROGRESS->DONE

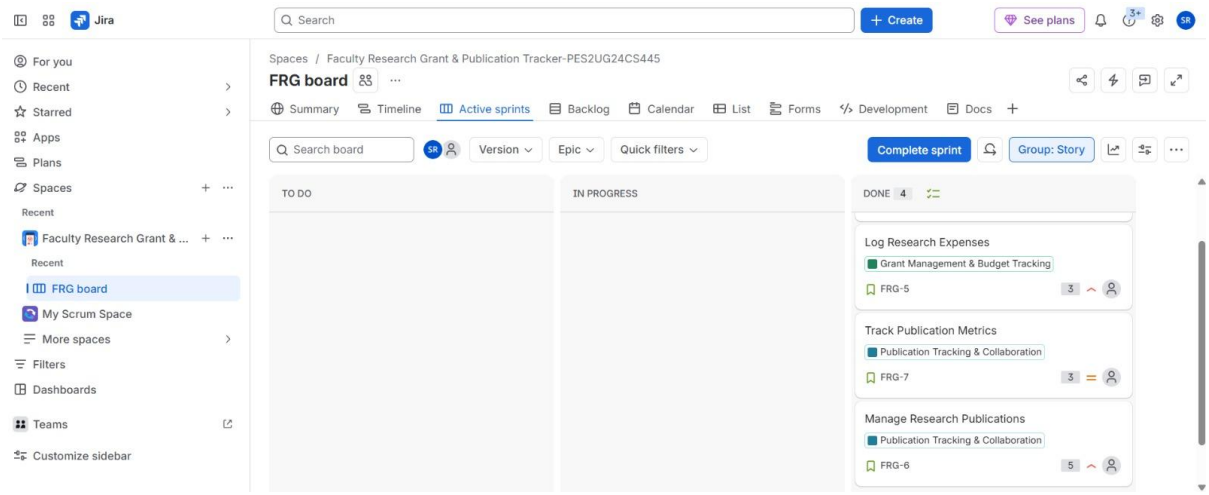

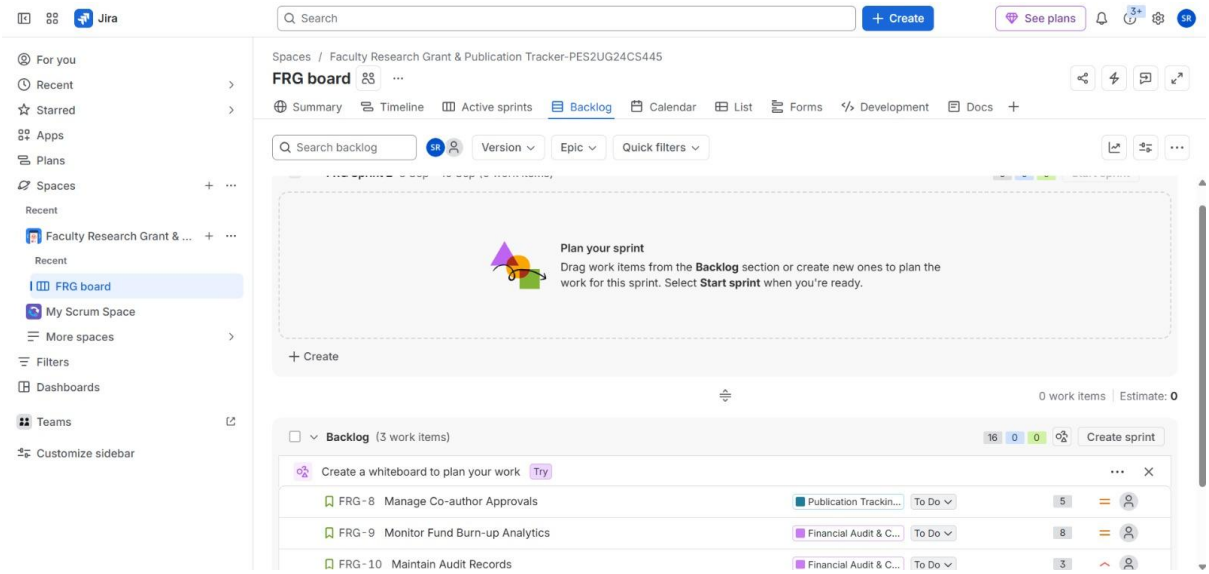

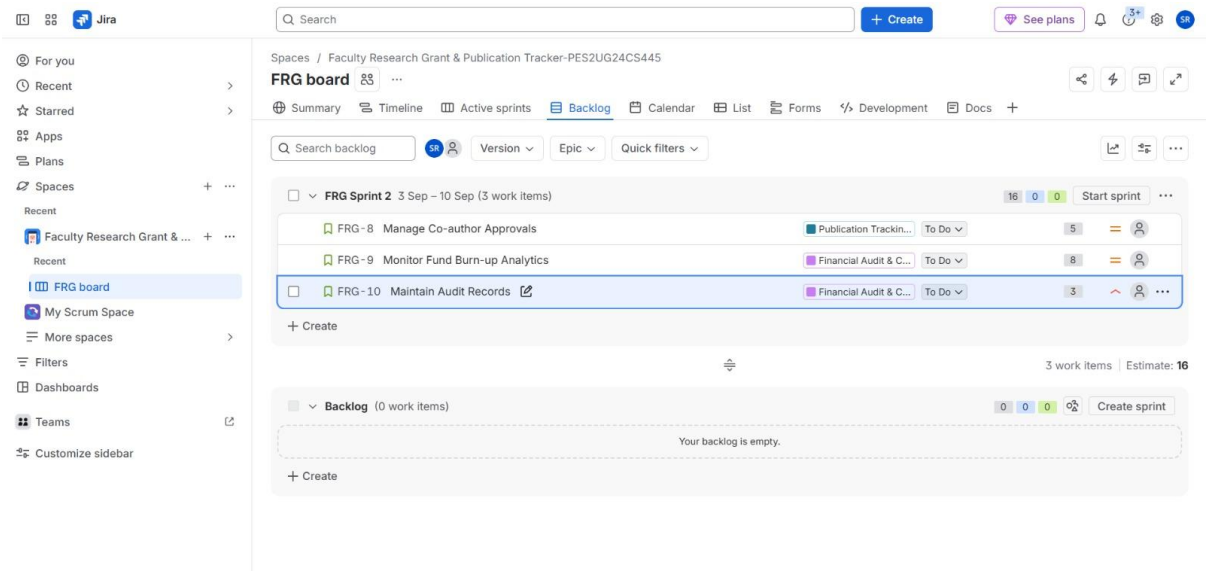

Now all the work items are in DONE then we press complete sprint

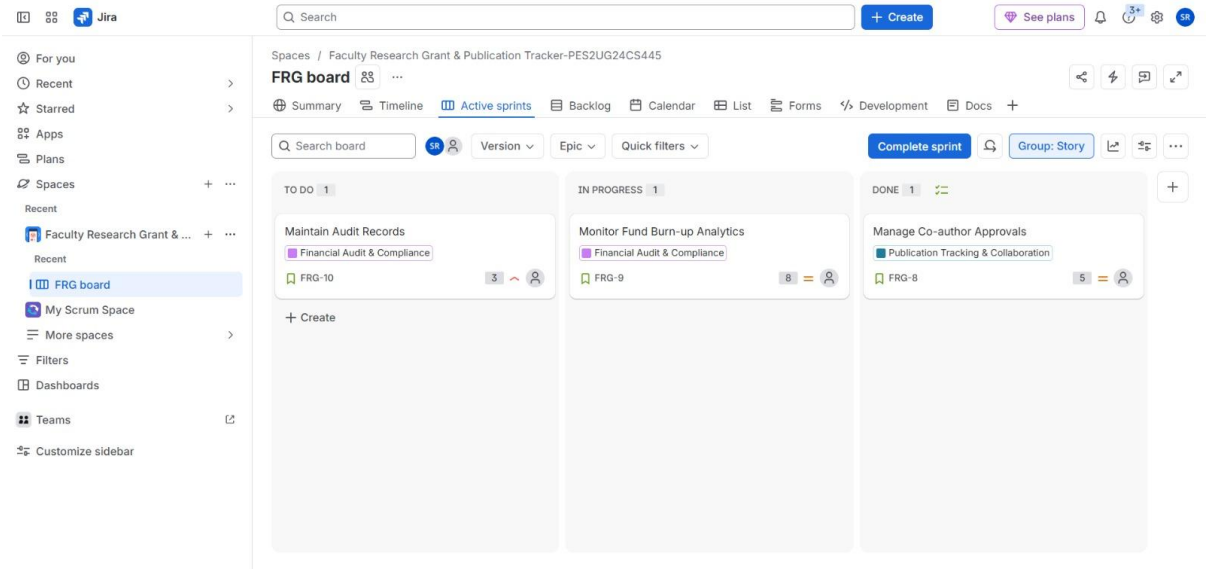

These are the rest work items present in backlog

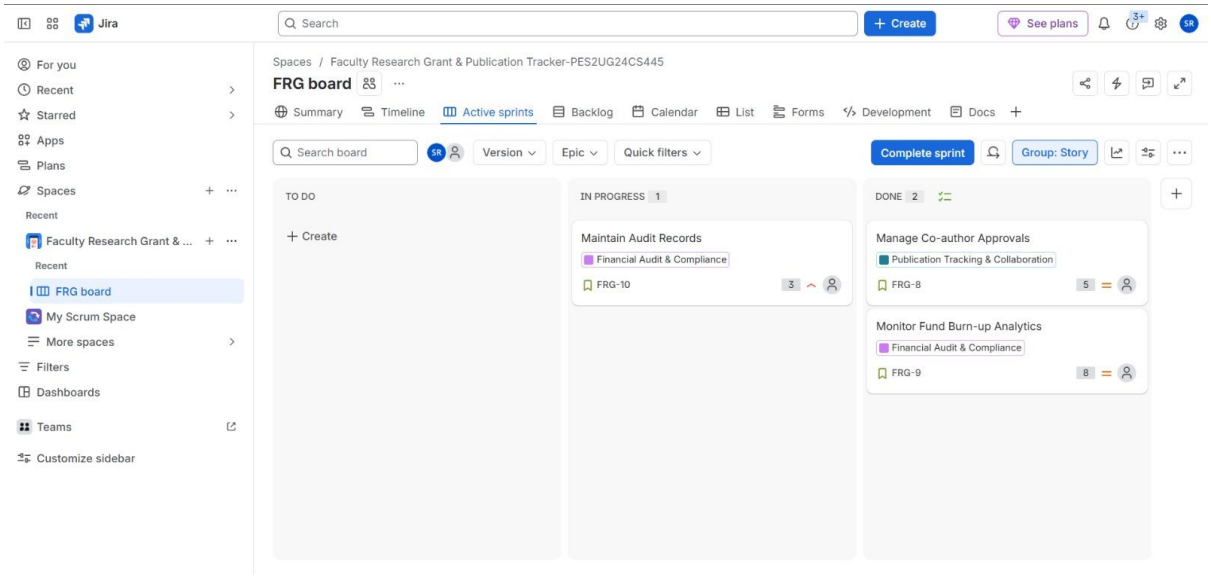

These remaining backlogs are further copied into FRG sprint-2 then press start sprint

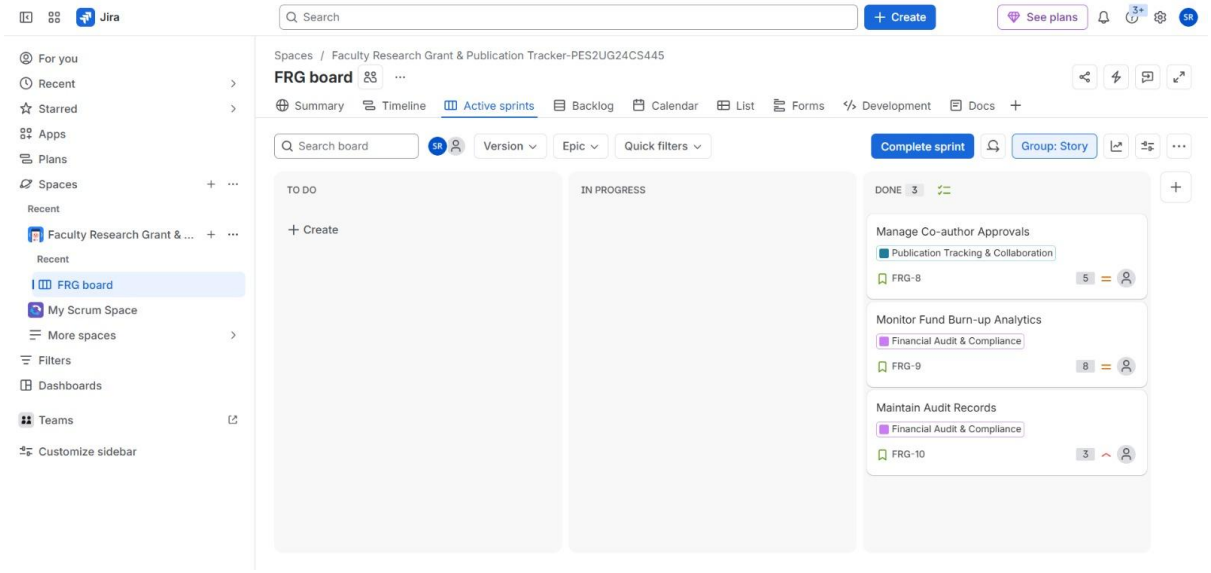

Then we move the work items in sprint-2 from TO-DO->IN PROGRESS->DONE

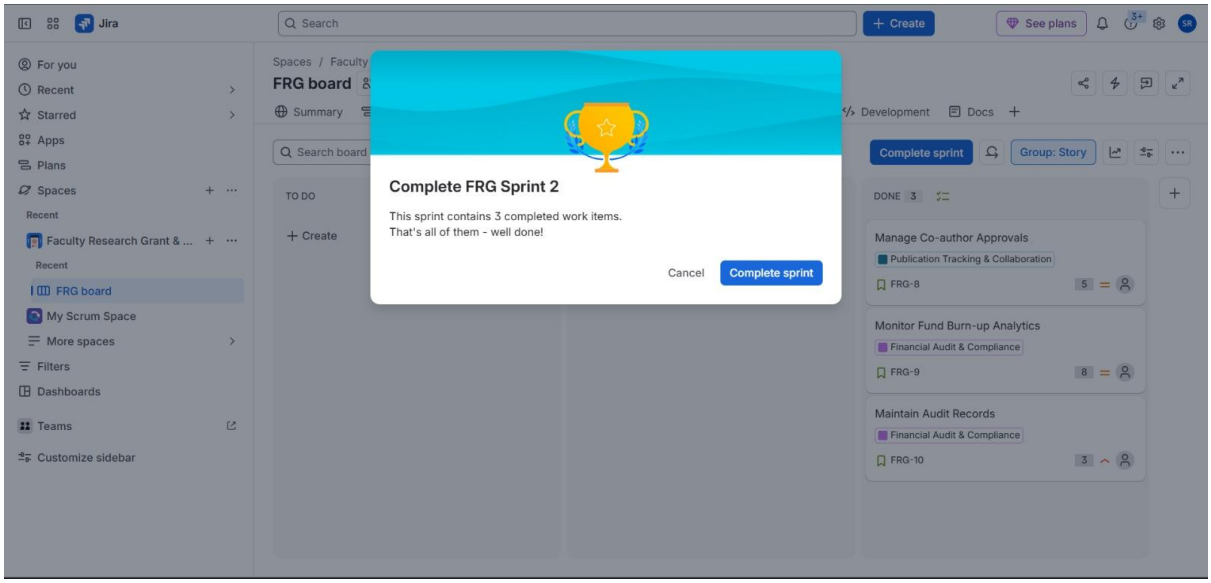

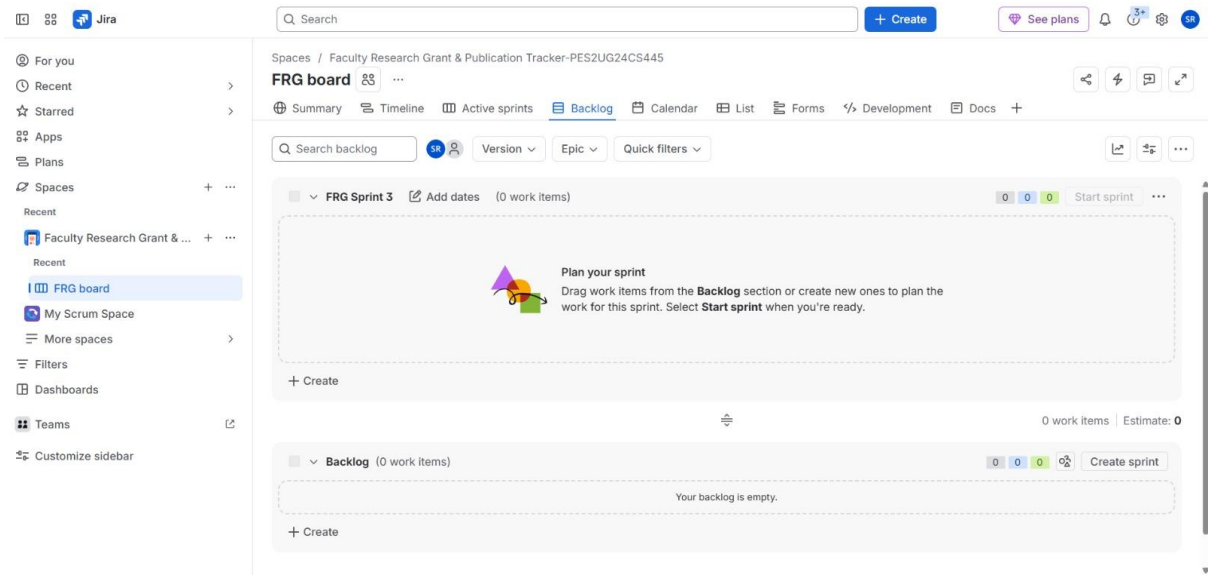

All the work items are in DONE then press complete sprint

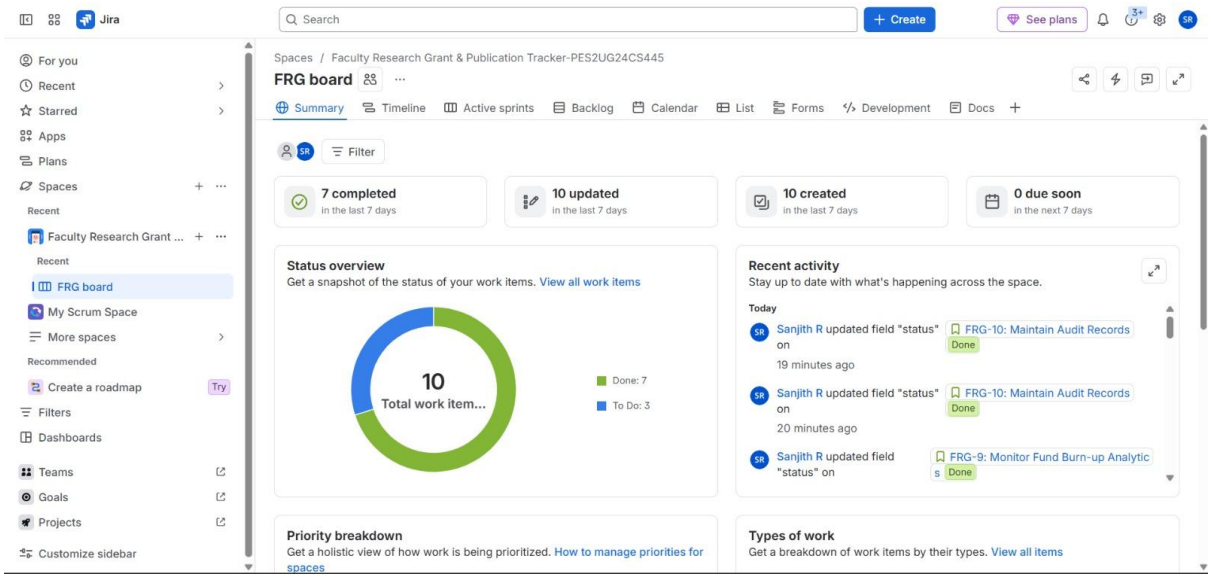

Then a dialogue box appears chose complete sprint

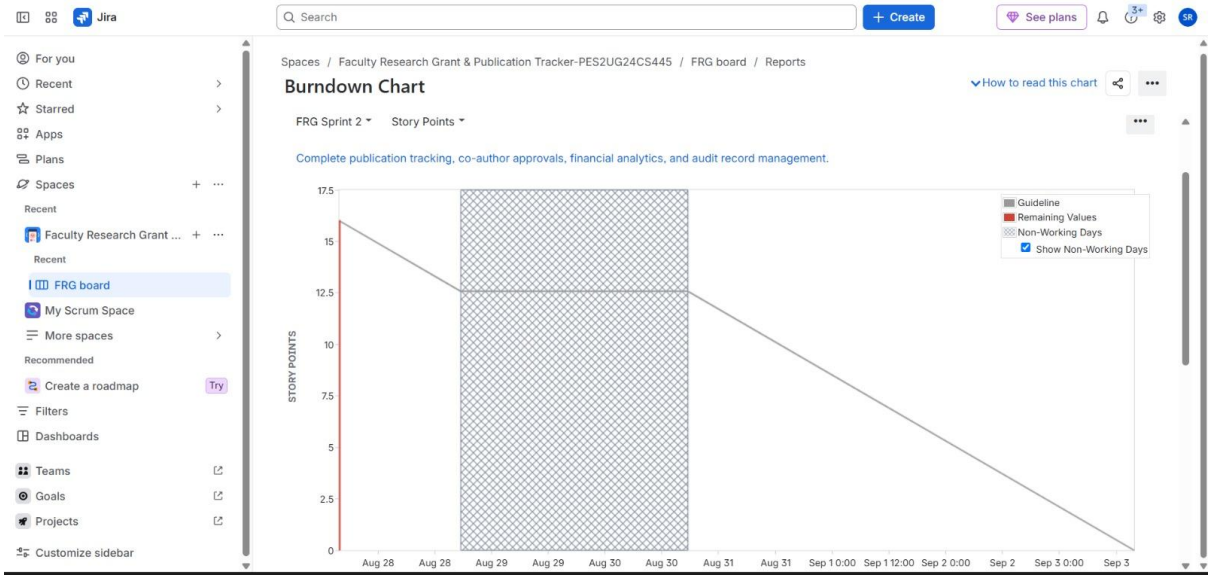

This screenshot shows Sprint 3 in the Jira backlog. Sprint 3 is empty because there are no work items left to add. The backlog is also empty, which means all the planned work has been completed.

This screenshot shows the Jira project summary page. It gives an overall view of the project, including the number of completed, updated, and created work items. The status overview shows 7 items completed and 3 items still in To Do.

Reflection Questions:

1. Yes, the estimations were mostly close to the actual effort
2. Yes, the backlog was prioritized properly. Important tasks related to grant management, publications, and financial auditing were given priority.
3. The sprint mostly followed the original plan. The planned work items were completed and moved through the different stages of the Jira board.
4. The burndown chart helped in understanding how much work was completed and how much was remaining during the sprint. It also showed that the team was able to handle the planned workload within the sprint.
